President's Corner

The annual show is almost upon us and there's nothing better than a great orchid show to start the New Year off right. There's something about seeing so many gorgeous plants all showing the pride of their owners that's really inspiring. What's especially inspiring to me is to see plants brought in by new members or novice growers who invariably surprise me with the plants they're displaying and how well those plants have been grown. I certainly hope to see a large number of plants brought in by novice growers this year – surprises are good!

Of course, since the show is almost here, it's almost too late to start cleaning up your plants so they'll look their best at the show. Everyone knows the basics of plant cleaning, but I thought I would go over a list of tips.

- Several weeks before the show, bring the plants that may be ready for display on the show date into a staging area. This will allow the plants to have more room and daily attention, which can lead to better flowering. Be sure in the staging area to orient your plants carefully toward the light and place them on tables about the same height as tables used in the show. Remember that flowers will tend to go toward bright light sources (windows) so you can have some control over the overall display of flowers on each individual plant. Orientation of the plant with respect to the light can be adjusted during this time to improve display. Generally, I would recommend that about twice the number of plants you would like to show be brought into the staging area. This allows choices to be made as the show date approaches.
- Start training the inflorescence with stakes early. Inflorescences that have a tendency to wander or bend can be controlled with careful early staking and tying, but ties should be examined daily to ensure the inflorescence is not bending or kinking because of the ties. Sadly, I've lost many spikes because I didn't look at ties daily! On plants with multiple inflorescences, stakes and ties can also be used to separate and place the spikes to show at their best. A plant with several well-spaced spikes looks better than one with all the spikes crowded together.
- A few days before the show, select the plants you want to display. If you've staged quite a few plants, this can be an enjoyable process as you're selecting out the best. The remainder can decorate your house and be enjoyed. Labels should be prepared for these plants. The best labels are easily visible and easy to read, but shouldn't be obtrusive. They need to be large enough to be seen, but should not be glaringly obvious from a distance. A label color I find works well is light green, whereas white labels I find too distracting. Always prepare two labels for each plant – invariably something will happen to mar or smudge a label and it's usually the only one for which you have no duplicate. Filling out entry forms at this time as well will save a lot of time later, and will make the entry process so much easier. Keep a list of the plants you'll be entering so you won't forget to pick up a plant when the show is over.

- The evening before the show, start cleaning the plants you're going to display. With each plant in turn, carefully remove old flower sheaths, old bracts on bulbs, dead growths, or any other unsightly dead material. A paper towel soaked in warm water can work wonders when you're trying to remove dead bracts on bulbs. Just give it a minute or two to soften the bract and it will usually remove easily. Inspect your plant carefully while cleaning to make sure it is free of disease, viruses and pests. You'll be sharing the display bench with other exhibitors, and you want to be a good neighbor.
- To improve the appearance of your leaves, and to clean them, don't use a leaf shine product as it can be detrimental to the leaf surfaces. Instead, use a mixture of warm water with about 10% to 15% skim milk. When the leaves are gently rubbed with a paper towel soaked in this solution, the dust, grime and water spots can be removed and a soft, natural looking shine will remain. Make sure to use a fresh paper towel for each plant, and to wash your hands or change disposable gloves between plants. When cleaning plants it's just too easy to accidentally transport pathogens, so care is needed.
- Dead or unsightly tissue at the ends of leaves should be removed by carefully cutting them with a fresh razor blade. The leaves should be cut to match the natural shape of the leaf as opposed to being cut with a blunt end – it just looks better to the viewer. Use a fresh razor blade with each plant to avoid plant contamination. To keep the edges of the cut leaves looking fresh for as long as possible, apply a small amount of Neosporin along the cut edge.
- After you've transported your plants to the show, and just before entering your plants, do a final check to ensure the spikes are staked just the way you want them, and that the flower show to their maximum potential. Place the label and adjust the label to be easily visible from the front; the volunteers who place your plant on the display tables will try to rotate your plant to look its best, but the label gives them a hint at the way you want the plant placed.
- Finally, just enjoy the show, and I hope you get lots of ribbons - Best of luck, Ken Jacobsen
