The Judging of Orchid Plants at the Peninsula Orchid Society's Show, 21 January 2011 by C. Todd Kennedy

Members of POS are welcome to take part in the judging of entries in the show for first, second and third place prizes, in what is known as Ribbon Judging. Judges, including POS members, who participated in the judging of plants for ribbons may remain and vote upon the plants proposed for trophies. Ribbon judging begins as soon as possible after 6:30 PM on Friday. You should let Todd Kennedy know if you intend to take part in judging, so that we may assign you to an appropriate team - one not engaged in judging your plants!

Participation in ribbon judging is an instructive start in orchid appreciation. Judges of the American Orchid Society have been invited to form the nucleus of each team of judges, to which POS members are assigned. AOS judges generally make certain that all members of the team are engaged and informed in the principles of awarding ribbons.

But there are written standards besides. The show schedule expressly cites the standards of the National Garden Clubs, Inc. in their Handbook, at page 105. Because their Handbook is a little obscure for most of us, the pertinent part is set out below. By its terms it is applicable to cut flowers, as their shows are particularly of flower arrangements, but the standards are appropriate for potted specimens of orchids also.

While the Garden Clubs use a printed score sheet for judging purposes, POS dispenses with this, but does require use of the Handbook to establish the standard for ribbon judging:

Container. The pot itself counts for something: the plant must be staged in a container (not wobbling, on its side, busted or crusted) to show the plant at its best, and appropriate (not disproportionate to stature of plant within it): basketed monopodials in Victorian fashion or moss-covered terra cotta could be a plus, or a traditional style used in Cymbidiums or Neofinetia. Cache-pots are welcome, but must never distract from the plant itself.

Plant Identification. The card provided by the show committee shall be complete and correct. The exhibitor is responsible for entry in the proper class. Either fault may disqualify a plant from a blue ribbon and therefore a trophy, especially in the open and advanced classes. Judges might (but are not required to) be more lenient for novice exhibitors.

Cultural Perfection. The terminology is that the plant should be at "peak of perfection," that is, at a stage of maturity of bloom proper for display and keeping for the duration of the show, with a maximum of flowers open at time of judging. The quantity of flowers should be appropriate to the size of the plant; this allows maximum recognition for a plant notoriously difficult to grow or bloom where the show is held. Color of foliage should demonstrate a happy, healthy plant, of flowers should be pleasing and for maximum recognition, unusual, delicate or striking (as in pleasing contrast). Form of plant should be typical of the species or grex, not drawn or runty, to be staked or otherwise trained in a way flattering to the natural growth of the plant; form of flower should be full, balanced among its segments, and undamaged. Substance should be turgid, unless the flower is famously diaphanous. Texture of foliage should not betray dehydration, the flower, not suggest "over the hill." Size of plant and its flowers should be ideal for its type, preferably above-average for those generally seen; plant in due proportion to both flower and container, not a single flower on a huge plant, nor a huge flower on a struggling plant making its last supreme effort at reproduction. The stem length should be of due proportion to the rest of the plant, considering the natural habit of some species.

Condition and grooming make an important opportunity to make up for deficiencies in cultural perfection. The plant should be healthy, must be pest and disease free, without damage from transport. Grooming of foliage, removal of salts and dead sheathing leaves is desirable, trimmed foliage is acceptable - so long as it doesn't look sheared - with the edges straight not ragged. Garden Clubs forbid use of leaf polish for good reason: it appears unnatural and distracts from the other aspects of the plant, and is ultimately unhealthy, clogging the stomata of the leaf. Judicious use of skim milk is not noticeable or objectionable. Staging of plants on the POS show bench is beyond the control of exhibitors but not of those on competitive tabletop exhibits. Those plants must be favorably presented: facing out, leveled and stable.

Distinction. This calls out the degree of superiority in the above qualities of plant and flower. Judges weigh the remarkable fine qualities of the exhibit and the degree of faults if any. Superiority of a plant (against others, which is what we are appraising) does not mean perfection.

From all this, should be apparent that the entry in its totality (pot, card, staging, flower, foliage, proportion...) is what is judged: never the flower or plant alone. In Britain, plant culture and flower quality are given equal 50% weight. The last Garden Clubs category, distinction, rules this out in America.

Anyone with passing exposure to the AOS score sheets for flower quality and for cultural merit will immediately recognize the Garden Clubs' standards as a combination of the two. This is no accident. The AOS and Garden Clubs judging standards were drawn up by the same person at the same time (Mrs William K. Dupont, in 1949).

The judging of orchids for AOS awards is much more difficult than ribbon judging: it requires constant reference to prior awards to determine the current standard for the orchid type. Ribbon judging on the other hand allows a judge to limit consideration to the closed universe of entries in the class. One needs only to put the entries in ordinal ranking. No matter whether or not any of the plants are of high quality or best condition, it should always be possible, using the above standards, to rank the entries.

Difficulty, if any there be, arises from the arbitrary determination of show classes, that might require nobile Dendrobiums to be considered against phalaenopsis Dendrobiums, or Barkerias against Brassavolas. The skill of judging (where our members are at disadvantage among the AOS judges) lies in being able to recognize each sort of orchid sui generis and, within that class so arbitrarily defined, which represents the best of its own type.

[C. Todd Kennedy has chaired judging of the POS annual show since 2005 and is chair of AOS Pacific Central Judging Center.]

Heal Quickly! Mary Gerritsen broke her elbow. I don't have details, so it is hard to know if an elephant stepped on it while she was photographing an orchid in India, or she broke it breaking free from a Burmese Python while hunting for in-situ orchids in Florida, or merely had a less than graceful exit from her car. Get better soon Mary!

Condolences to Eric and Chaunie Langland. Eric's father passed away very suddenly on January 2 of this year.

San Francisco Conservatory of Flowers Docent Training Starts in February!

Share your love of botany and tropical plants with Conservatory of Flowers visitors! Join the next Conservatory volunteer training program.

Jungle Guides lead tours for 2nd-5th grade classes. Tours are held Tuesday-Friday from September through May at 10:00 a.m. Tours are offered at no cost to schools and cover the basics of plant evolution, conservation, botany, and tropical ecosystems.

Docents lead daily free tours and special guided tours for groups to educate adult visitors about the Conservatory's collection of tropical plants.

The Conservatory welcomes volunteers of all ages and experience levels. The seven session training program will be held 2:00 – 5:00 p.m. on Wednesdays from February 16 to March 30.
